Sommario/riassunto	In dieser interdisziplinaren Studie untersucht Alexander Ahrens agyptische Objekte, die in der nordlichen Levante (Libanon, Syrien und Regionen der Turkei) in Kontexten des zweiten Jahrtausends v. Chr. gefunden wurden. Er stutzt sich auf Methoden der Archaologie und der soziokulturellen Theorie, um mittels einer eingehenden Analyse der Fundkontexte Strategien der Rezeption und eine damit verbundene Emulation der agyptischen materiellen Kultur und ihrer spezifischen Motivik durch nordlevantinische Eliten zu charakterisieren. Die Studie vermittelt so ein besseres Verstandnis der Komplexitat und Vielfalt interkultureller Beziehungen im bronzezeitlichen ostlichen Mittelmeerraum. In this interdisciplinary study, Alexander Ahrens examines Egyptian objects found in the northern Levant (covering the modern states of Lebanon, Syria, and parts of Turkey) in archaeological contexts dated to the second millennium BCE. Drawing on methods from archaeology and sociocultural theory, he provides a characterization of the perception and accompanying emulation of Egyptian material culture within northern Levantine elite spheres. Analyzing many of the artifacts' find contexts, he proposes a new way to explore their ancient perception and reception through the study of archaeological and historical sources. The book thus enhances our understanding of the complexity and diversity of intercultural relations in the eastern Mediterranean during the Bronze Age.
