Sommario/riassunto	The Journal of Constructivist Psychology is the first publication to provide a professional forum for such diverse expressions of constructivism as personal construct theory, dialogical self theory, radical constructivism, social constructionism, narrative psychology, and postmodern psychology. The journal publishes articles highlighting theoretical, empirical, and methodological developments in constructivist, social constructionist, and related scholarship – as well as relevant contributions to professional practice in areas such as psychotherapy, education, and industry. Empirical studies (quantitative and qualitative), theoretical position papers, literature reviews, and book reviews are all welcome. The journal invites scholars and practitioners across relevant disciplines to submit manuscripts for consideration.
