| Sommario/riassunto | This journal is devoted to the application of theory and research from social psychology toward the better understanding of human adaptation and adjustment, especially psychopathology and related phenomena. Topics of interest include, but are not limited to, traditionally defined psychopathology (e.g., depression), common emotional and behavioral |

problems in living (e.g., conflicts in close relationships), the enhancement of subjective well-being, and the processes of psychological change in everyday life (e.g., self-regulation) and professional settings (e.g., psychotherapy and counseling). Articles reporting the results of theory-driven empirical research are given priority, but theoretical articles, review articles, clinical case studies, and essays on professional issues are also welcome.
