Sommario/riassunto	Books under suspicion - that was the title of an exhibition at the Goettingen State and University Library, at which examples of Nazi looted and looted books from their holdings were presented. The exhibition catalog not only documents all the objects on display, but also provides brief introductory information on the historical background. During the Third Reich, almost all academic libraries included books in their holdings that came from the confiscated libraries of workers' associations and other organizations that were stolen by the National Socialists during raids on bookshops and publishers and passed on to libraries that private individuals were forced to hand over or that were looted in the occupied territories during the war. Many other examples could be given. The present exhibition catalog gives an insight into the contemporary practice of a university library in dealing with Nazi looted and looted books, as they are called today.
