Sommario/riassunto	Few discoveries have had such an impact on medicine. For more than a century, radiodiagnosis has been of fundamental importance for attention to human health. However, this new technology has not only brought benefits. Just as quick as its use was the damage caused to researchers, doctors, patients and other individuals exposed to this type of radiation. The possible damage is not only related to the harmful effects of ionizing radiation, but also to possible errors in diagnosis. Aiming to contribute to the development of the risk control area in radiodiagnosis, in the fields of knowledge of collective health and health surveillance, which are so important for individual and collective health, the analysis of risk control in radiodiagnosis and its conditioning factors,
