Sommario/riassunto	Why is it important to investigate indexing during cataloguing? The answer is that, through this procedure, it is possible to know the realities of librarians and users. The research presented in this book stands out for two reasons: it is a collective work, with common objectives, theoretical and methodological basis; adopts a socio-cognitive approach that not only highlights the task of indexing subjects in cataloguing books by cataloguers, but also privileges and interweaves the different views of catalogue users, students, teachers, researchers, reference librarians and library leaders - groups that they are part of the cataloguers' socio-cognitive context, as they are users of the results of the task they perform. This is a reference work for library professionals.
