Sommario/riassunto	This book, compiled and presented by Andrée Corvol, Charles Dereix, Pierre Gresser, and François Lormant, explores the history, ecology, and socio-economic significance of mountain forests in France. It examines the delayed human colonization of mountainous regions, the spiritual and material value of these forests, and their economic importance through various historical periods. The book also addresses the impact of climate change and natural disasters on mountain forests and the subsequent reforestation efforts. Intended for scholars, researchers, and the general public interested in forestry, environmental history, and conservation.
