Sommario/riassunto	This volume combines the presentations of the 13th Göttingen workshop on family law, which was held on October 31, 2014, and which dealt with the family law consequences of fertility treatment with foreign germ cells. Since a German reproductive medicine law is missing, central questions of parentage law (such as the legal assignment of the child to the parent of choice) have to be solved more poorly than right with the regulations aimed at natural reproduction. For decades, reforms have therefore been advised and the highest judicial jurisdiction is increasingly taking on the task of developing solutions by means of judicial legal training. The articles in this volume provide an overview of the current discussion about a reform of parentage law and supplement it by integrating constitutional, comparative and interdisciplinary aspects. Volume 17 of the "Göttingen Legal Writings" series: The series is published by the law faculty of the Georg-August University and makes events at the faculty accessible to an interested public.
