In this case, we have decided to systematically, solely and exclusively, expose the individual "primary" bibliography, that is, the work of Marañón himself. In relation to what is known as "secondary" bibliography, or what is the same, what has been written about Marañón, an annotated bibliographic review of these works has been included. The reason is twofold: Firstly, because in the case of the biographies that have been written about Marañón -with the exception of Pedro Laín's biographical essay-, in general terms, it has a hagiographic and descriptive numerative.

character and few interpretative rudiments. And, secondly, because the detailed and academic studies of specific aspects of his work are not very numerous and, therefore, do not require a clarification, let's call it
