	Sommario/riassunto	Visualization of massively large datasets presents two significant problems. First, the dataset must be prepared for visualization, and traditional dataset manipulation methods fail due to lack of temporary storage or memory. The second problem is the presentation of the data in the visual media, particularly real-time visualization of streaming time series data. An ongoing research project addresses both these problems, using data from two national repositories. This work is presented here, with the results of the current effort summarized and future plans, including 3D visualization, outlined.
