Sommario/riassunto	This book brings together the works in which the author has reflected his reflections on the way in which the history of law is written, and on the reasons, ends and intentions that move those who cultivate that speciality of history. Historiography is considered taking into account its results, not its theoretical methodology, and taking into account both its present conditions and its future potential. In these pages, aspects such as the politically interested reconstruction of historical-legal schools from the forties of the last century, the renewal and opening of historiographical perspectives around the eighties, or the possible incidence of constitutional normality in the reconstruction and exposition of the legal and constitutional orders of the past.
