

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910148610103321
Autore	Fang Karen
Titolo	Arresting Cinema : Surveillance in Hong Kong Film // Karen Fang
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Stanford, CA : , : Stanford University Press, , [2020] ©2017
ISBN	1-5036-0075-0
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (241 pages)
Disciplina	791.430 95125
Soggetti	Surveillance in motion pictures Crime films - China - Hong Kong - History and criticism Motion pictures - China - Hong Kong - History
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Frontmatter -- CONTENTS -- Preface -- Introduction: A Race of Peeping Toms? "Rear Window Ethics" in Hong Kong -- ONE. Watching the Watchman: Michael Hui's Surveillance Comedies -- TWO. On the "China Watch": Prosperity and Paranoia in Reunification-Era Cinema -- THREE. "Only" a Policeman: Joint Venture Cinema and the Mediatization of the Hong Kong Police -- FOUR. "Representing the Chinese Government": Hong Kong Undercover in an Age of Self-Censorship -- Conclusion: Toward a Global Surveillance Cinema -- Appendix: Chinese Glossary -- Notes -- Bibliography -- Index
Sommario/riassunto	When Ridley Scott envisioned Blade Runner's set as "Hong Kong on a bad day," he nodded to the city's overcrowding as well as its widespread use of surveillance. But while Scott brought Hong Kong and surveillance into the global film repertoire, the city's own cinema has remained outside of the global surveillance discussion. In Arresting Cinema, Karen Fang delivers a unifying account of Hong Kong cinema that draws upon its renowned crime films and other unique genres to demonstrate Hong Kong's view of surveillance. She argues that Hong Kong's films display a tolerance of—and even opportunism towards—the soft cage of constant observation, unlike the fearful view prevalent in the West. However, many surveillance cinema studies focus solely on European and Hollywood films, discounting other artistic traditions and industrial circumstances. Hong Kong's films show a more crowded, increasingly economically stratified, and postnational world that nevertheless offers an aura of hopeful futurity. Only by exploring Hong Kong surveillance film can we begin to shape a truly global understanding of Hitchcock's "rear window ethics."
