Sommario/riassunto

The aim of this volume is to witness how the activities of the Prague School have continued to bring important new insights and discussions between the 1940's and the present time. Contributions are included which have escaped attention on an international scale because they were published in Czech; several papers have been written especially for this volume. The contributions cover various domains: syntax, morphology, sociolinguistics, graphemics, the language system, the lexicon, and contrastive linguistics.

Sommario/riassunto

Slote argues that emotion is, on conceptual grounds, involved in all human thought and action, rather than merely being causally connected with other aspects of the mind. Hume did not advocate this kind of general sentimentalism about the mind, and the book's main arguments and conclusions are only very partially anticipated in German Romanticism and in the Chinese philosophical tendency to avoid rigid distinctions between thought and emotion.
