Sommario/riassunto	This book, authored by Albert Ahuka Ona Longombe and Patrick Wenda T. Tshilumba, serves as a practical guide for aspiring medical students in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It addresses the common challenges faced by new students at medical faculties, such as the high rates of failure and dropout. The authors propose solutions to help students adapt to their studies, avoid wasting time and resources, and ultimately succeed in their medical education. The book emphasizes the importance of support and guidance for new students, highlighting the lack of formal mechanisms in Congolese medical faculties to assist them. With a focus on practical advice, the authors aim to provide a resource that enables students to navigate the complexities of medical education successfully.
