Sommario/riassunto

This book, originally published in 1850 and written by Sir Andrew Leith Hay, provides a detailed narrative of the Peninsular War, a significant conflict during the Napoleonic Wars where British forces, led by figures such as Sir John Moore and the Duke of Wellington, fought against the French in the Iberian Peninsula. The author offers a firsthand account based on his experiences as an officer, aiming to preserve the memory of significant events and individuals involved in the war. The narrative includes descriptions of key battles, military strategies, and the conditions faced by troops. It is intended for readers interested in military history and the personal experiences of those who participated in the historical events of the early 19th century.
