Sommario/riassunto	In this follow-up to her first memoir, Marie Claire Lim Moore has no shortage of entertaining stories from her childhood in Vancouver and New York City and her expat experience in Singapore and Hong Kong. Claire's positively Filipino parents have a big influence on her whether it comes to managing family and career, meeting world leaders, or simply making new friends. From stray observations ("everything is funnier at church") to life mantras ("don't let perfection hold you back") to litmus tests ("would you serve drinks at my mother's art show?"), Claire's warm and honest storytelling will resonate with readers and leave them smiling.
