Sommario/riassunto	Horror Trek: A True Story of Bataan, the Death March and Three and One-Half Years in Japanese Prison Camps by Robert W. Levering is a personal narrative detailing the harrowing experiences of American soldiers during World War II. The book recounts the tragic defense of Bataan, the brutal conditions of the Bataan Death March, and the subsequent years of imprisonment in Japanese camps. Through vivid storytelling, Levering shares the resilience and camaraderie of the soldiers who endured unimaginable hardships. His account serves as a tribute to the courage of his fellow soldiers and aims to inspire greater efforts for global peace. The book is enriched with illustrations and personal correspondence, providing a comprehensive view of the author's experiences. It is aimed at readers interested in military history and personal stories of survival.
