Sommario/riassunto

This work, originally published in 1895, is a detailed memoir of General Count Philippe de Ségur, who served as an aide-de-camp to Napoleon. It chronicles his military career, experiences, and observations during the Napoleonic era. The narrative provides personal insights into the significant events of the time, including campaigns in Russia, Germany, and Spain. Revised by his grandson and translated by H. A. Patchett-Martin, the memoir blends historical events with personal anecdotes, offering a unique perspective on Napoleon's campaigns and the political landscape of early 19th-century Europe. Aimed at historians and enthusiasts of military history, the book also delves into the life of Philippe's father and great-grandfather, highlighting their roles in French and European history.
