Sommario/riassunto	Michael Lambertus examines the influence of perceived homosexual sexual and gender nonconform behaviors on the elicitation of two moral emotions, disgust and contempt, as well as moral judgment of male participants in his study. In doing so, he considers the extent to which these men endorse specific cultural beliefs about masculinity-- also referred to as 'masculinity ideology'. The author succeeds in proving an increase in disgust towards perceived homosexual, but not towards heterosexual sexual behavior of a description of a fictional person, the more the participants advocate masculine gender role norms. Contents • Morality and Moral Emotions • Endorsement of Male Role Norms • Elicitation of Disgust, Contempt, and Moral Judgment Target Groups • Lecturers and students of psychology, especially social and moral psychology • Practitioners and researchers in the fields of
