Sommario/riassunto	This scholarly work explores the historical narratives and cultural traditions of Pre-Islamic Arabia. It examines the sources of Arabic literature that recount the period before the rise of Islam, focusing on poetry, genealogy, and historical tales. The book delves into the legacy of the imyar dynasty and other ancient Arabian stories, questioning the historical value and reliability of these accounts. It offers insight into how early Arabic writers documented and interpreted their past, blending fact with myth to preserve cultural heritage. Intended for historians and scholars interested in Middle Eastern studies, the work critically analyzes the methodologies used in the transmission of Arabian history and literature.
