Sommario/riassunto	"Uses national fecundity surveys to examine changes in women's labor market participation from 1976-87. Employs questionnaires and in-depth interviews conducted in Mexico City, Tijuana, and Merida to analyze women's work outside the home. Focuses on structural factors that impact women's labor force participation, links between work and maternity and child care, changing gender roles, domestic violence, and differences between middle- and working-class women"-- Handbook of Latin American Studies, v. 57.
