Sommario/riassunto	'Don't forget' and 'don't remember'. These two contradictory aspects have always characterized the autobiographical and collective memory of dramatic historical events, such as the Shoah. This volume, which had its genetic moment in a couple of conferences held in Pistoia and Florence during the celebrations of the Day of Remembrance in 2014, moves along these two bumpy paths of making memory. At the center, the work by Andrea Devoto on the memory of the political deportation to Tuscany. The authors hosted here have tried to weave links and point out new ways of analysis and reflections accompanied by the awareness that the keystone of the past lies in the present. For this reason, the book aspires to act as a dialogue partner within the social practices of memory and civic education of citizens. Marialuisa Menegatto is a clinical and community psychologist, psychotherapist and PhD student at the University of Verona and coordinator of the Memoria Viva Section of the Andrea Devoto Foundation. Adriano Zamperini is professor of the Psychology of Violence, Psychology of Social Discomfort and Interpersonal Relations at the University of Padua and head of the Living Memory Section of the Andrea Devoto Foundation.
