Sommario/riassunto

This book explores the development of the discipline of Criminology on the island of Ireland, through conversations with leading criminologists. Adding depth and breadth to the understandings of this growing discipline, leading scholars discuss their personal journey to Criminology, their research areas, their theoretical influences and the impact of the discipline of Criminology on how we think about criminal justice in Ireland and beyond. Research topics include desistance, victims' rights, parole, policing and research methods. The book explores what influences framed the work of key thinkers in the area and how Criminology intersects with policy and practice within and beyond the criminological and criminal justice fields. It provides an insight into how the discipline has emerged as a discrete subject through a discussion of Ireland's key historical moments. It argues that Ireland's unique historical, cultural, political, social and economic arrangements and research about Ireland have much to offer the international field of Criminology. This volume also reflects on future directions for Irish Criminology, as well as sounding warnings to ensure the healthy development of the field as a discipline in its own right and as an interdisciplinary undertaking. Orla Lynch is Senior Lecturer in Criminology at University College Cork, Ireland. Yasmine Ahmed is a PhD researcher, research assistant and part-time Lecturer in Criminology at University College Cork, Ireland. Hellen Russell is a PhD researcher and part-time Lecturer in University College Cork and WAVE Trauma Centre Belfast, Ireland. Kevin Hosford is a PhD researcher and research assistant in the Department of Sociology and Criminology at University College Cork, Ireland.
