Nota di contenuto	An inquiry into the disposition of Chinese agriculture -- Corporate social responsibility and the bottom line -- Transparency: a two-way mirror? -- Closing the gender gap in Bangladesh: inequality in education, employment and earnings -- Technology revolutions and social development.
Sommario/riassunto	In China, the agricultural sector has been playing a fundamental and dominating role in Chinese society for thousands of years. As portrayed in the old-fashioned doctrine, "Intellectual, farmer, craftsman and merchant", the traditional Chinese social class had been classified to some degree resembling the ancient Greek way of philosopher-politics.
