

|                         |   |
|-------------------------|---|
| 1. Record Nr.           | UNINA9910454639703321   |
| Autore                  | Stopford John <1953->   |
| Titolo                  | The skillful self [[electronic resource]] : liberalism, culture, and the politics of skill / / John Stopford  |
| Pubbl/distr/stampa      | Lanham, MD, : Lexington Books, c2009  |
| ISBN                    | 1-282-49437-697866124943760-7391-3508-2   |
| Descrizione fisica      | 1 online resource (252 p.)  |
| Disciplina              | 320.51  |
| Soggetti                | LiberalismCultureElectronic books.  |
| Lingua di pubblicazione | Inglese   |
| Formato                 | Materiale a stampa  |
| Livello bibliografico   | Monografia  |
| Note generali           | Description based upon print version of record.   |
| Nota di bibliografia    | Includes bibliographical references and index.  |
| Nota di contenuto       | Contents; Preface; Introduction; Chapter 01. Liberalism, Culture, Cultural Participation; Chapter 02. Community, Culture, Autonomy; Chapter 03. Culture and Identity; Chapter 04. Education; Chapter 05. Skill, Technology, Capability; Chapter 06. Politics of Skill; Bibliography; Index; About the Author  |
| Sommario/riassunto      | Developing a political approach to culture that avoids both the pitfalls of neutralism and the perils of perfectionism is among the most urgent tasks facing contemporary liberal theory. Drawing on Rawls's political liberalism as well as recent work by capability theorists and major critics of liberalism, The Skillful Self makes the case for a liberal politics of skill in which the skillful self forms the focus of a nonperfectionist approach to culture and cultural policy. |