

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910461489203321
Autore	Cove John J
Titolo	What the bones say [[electronic resource]] : Tasmanian aborigines, science, and domination // John J. Cove
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Ottawa, : Carleton University Press, c1995
ISBN	1-283-53034-1 9786613842794 0-7735-8145-6
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (236 p.)
Disciplina	174/.9309
Soggetti	Anthropological ethics Anthropology - Political aspects Indigenous peoples - Research - Australia - Tasmania Social sciences - Research - Moral and ethical aspects Social sciences - Research - Political aspects Electronic books.
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references.
Nota di contenuto	I. Anthropology and the Politics of Contemporary Research -- II. The Early Colonial Period (1803-76) -- III. The Science and Politics of Race (1876-1950) -- IV. Old Science and New Realities (1951-90) -- V. Bones and Other Objects of Contention (1951-92) -- VI. Ethics in the Human Sciences.
Sommario/riassunto	What the Bones Say is a thoroughly engaging history of one line of human science research and its consequences for the hapless and often helpless subject of study: the indigenous peoples of Tasmania. Research questions arising from skeletal remains were posed and pursued on the assumption that vanished forebears bore no relation to, nor had any intrinsic meaning for, aboriginal Tasmanians of today. The author finds these premises incorrect, exposing both the biases of research done for political ends, and documenting their galvanizing effect on indigenous status and land claims, ownership of skeletal remains, the political mobilization of Aboriginal interests, and native advocacy.

