Sommario/riassunto	The forty years of American Indian literature between 1920 and 1960 have been called politically and intellectually moribund. On the contrary, this book identifies a group of American Indian writers who share an interest in the revolutionary potential of the indigenous peoples of Mexico - and whose work demonstrates a surprisingly assertive literary politics in the era. By contextualising this group of American Indian authors in the work of their contemporaries, this book reveals how the literary history of this period is far more rich and nuanced than is generally acknowledged.
