Nota di contenuto	Complementarity from the line of fire -- The Rome Statute : complementarity in its legal context -- Uganda : compromising complementarity -- Sudan : complementarity in a state of denial -- Paradoxes unravelled : explanations for complementarity's weak catalysing effect on domestic proceedings -- Complementarity in the line of fire.
Sommario/riassunto	Of the many expectations attending the creation of the first permanent International Criminal Court, the greatest has been that the principle of complementarity would catalyse national investigations and prosecutions of conflict-related crimes and lead to the reform of domestic justice systems. Sarah Nouwen explores whether complementarity has had such an effect in two states subject to ICC intervention: Uganda and Sudan. Drawing on extensive empirical research and combining law, legal anthropology and political economy, she unveils several effects and outlines the catalysts for them. However, she also reveals that one widely anticipated effect - an increase in domestic proceedings for conflict-related crimes - has barely occurred. This finding leads to the unravelling of paradoxes that go right to the heart of the functioning of an idealistic Court in a world of real constraints.
