| Sommario/riassunto      | The legacy of the relationship between African American writers andCommunism in the US is a contested one. Bergin argues that in threenovels, by seminal mid-century authors (Wright, Himes and Ellison)Communism is not dismissed as incapable of meeting the demands ofblack political identity but is castigated for its refusal to do so. Adetailed focus on the political milieu in which these texts operatechallenges many of the presumptions about the 'inability' ofCommunism to comprehend racial oppression, which dominate literarycritical approaches to these novels. She draws on the complexformations black political agency presumed and reproduced byAmerican Communism during the Depression. |
