| Sommario/riassunto | Springing from an unprecedented meeting between the sons and daughters of the Holocaust and the children of Nazis, "'Justice Matters: Legacies of the Holocaust and World War II'" examines the psychology of hatred and ethnic resentments passed from generation to generation. Weissmark, a social psychologist and the child of Holocaust survivors, argues that justice is quite naturally shaped by emotional responses. In the face of unjust treatment, the natural response is resentment and deep anger - and a desire for revenge. While legal systems offer a structured means for redressing injustice, it |
