Nota di contenuto	Introduction -- Uncovering the Interaction of Chemistry and Behavior in Depression: Dimensions vs. Diagnosis in Structuring Research -- Depression is a "Storm" not a Lowering of Spirit: The Experience of the Severe Depressed State -- "Rashomon" and the Componential Approach to Developing Measures of Mood and Behavior -- Dimensions of Depression: The Conflictual Structure of the Depressed State -- False Assumptions: The Multidimensional Quality and its Relationships to Functioning of the Central Nervous System -- Testing New Hypotheses about Neurochemistry, Depression and Drugs -- Developing a More Effective and More Efficient Clinical Trial Model -- Elaboration of the New Theory of Depression and Conclusions -- Postscript -- Appendix 1 The Multivantaged (MV) Assessment Methods -- Appendix 2 The Video Interview Behavior Evaluation Scales (VIBES).
Sommario/riassunto	In the 1950s, psychiatric "miracle drugs" revolutionized the treatment of depression, improving the quality of life of countless patients. Over half a century and millions of prescriptions later, advances in brain structure, neurochemistry, and genetics are providing clues to the mechanisms of depression and pointing to new therapeutic possibilities. Depression and Drugs makes the most of these recent developments, introducing both a neurobehavioral theory of chemical/behavioral interactions and a practical framework for modernizing the conceptualization, assessment, and treatment of depression. Its multidimensional analysis offers insights into the brain structures most affected by the disorder, and the complex phenomena involved in medication. By focusing on cognitive, behavioral, and mood effects as well as brain chemistry, the author identifies false leads that have led to impasses in developing better antidepressants and explains why "mild" cases are often the hardest to treat. These groundbreaking ideas bring readers their closest to scientifically answering the eternal questions How do depressive states form? and How do drugs resolve them? Included in the coverage: Dimensions versus diagnosis in depression research. The experience of the severe depressed state. The componential approach to developing measures of mood and behavior. Testing new hypotheses about chemistry, depression, and drugs. Developing a more effective clinical trial model. Plus appendices detailing emerging assessment methods. This knowledge has the potential for sparking change across a number of fields, making Depression and Drugs of immediate interest to graduate students in psychology and medicine, practicing clinical psychologists, psychiatrists, clinical psychopharmacologists, and basic researchers in psychology and neuropsychopharmacology.

Sommario/riassunto	Golo M. Bartsch betrachtet die sicherheitspolitischen Auswirkungen des Klimawandels in der Arktis auf in der deutschsprachigen Forschung bislang einmalige Weise. Aus einem interdisziplinären Blickwinkel verbindet er aktuelle natur- und gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Erkenntnisse zum tiefgreifenden Wandel des Hohen Nordens miteinander und vergleicht politische Strategien der acht Anrainerstaaten, der NATO und der EU. So zeigt sich die Arktis derzeit auch im Angesicht zunehmender Militärpräsenz und stagnierender Beziehungen zwischen den westlichen Anrainern und Russland als eine eher von friedlicher Kooperation als von Konflikt geprägte Weltregion. Der Inhalt Das Verhältnis von Klimawandel und Sicherheit Die Arktis heute: Umwelt, Ressourcen, Institutionen Militär- und Konfliktpotentiale im Polarmeer Arktisstrategien im Vergleich Arktische Sicherheit: Fazit und Ausblick Die Zielgruppen Lehrende und Studierende, insbesondere im Bereich Politikwissenschaften/Internationale Beziehungen PraktikerInnen aus Politik, Wirtschaft, Streitkräften, Umweltschutz und Medien Der Autor Golo M. Bartsch studierte Staats- und Sozialwissenschaften sowie Governance in München und Hagen und promovierte zur arktischen Sicherheitspolitik an der Universität Bielefeld. Er ist Referent für Gemeinsame Sicherheits- und Verteidigungspolitik der Europäischen Union im Bundesministerium der Verteidigung in Berlin.
