

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910508506503321
Autore	Klein Sascha
Titolo	Skyscraping frontiers : the skyscraper as heterotopia in the 20th-century American novel and film / / Sascha Klein
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Bern, : Peter Lang International Academic Publishing Group, 2020 Berlin : , : Peter Lang, , [2020] ©2020
ISBN	3-631-82197-2 3-631-82196-4
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (314 pages) : illustrations
Collana	Contributions to English and American literary studies ; ; Volume 4
Disciplina	813.5409
Soggetti	American fiction - 20th century - History and criticism Criticism, interpretation, etc. United States USA
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Sommario/riassunto	As a space of extremes, the skyscraper has been continually constructed as an urban frontier in American cultural productions. Like its counterpart of the American wilderness, this vertical frontier serves as a privileged site for both subversion and excessive control. Beyond common metaphoric readings, this study models the skyscraper not only as a Foucauldian heterotopia, but also as a complex network of human and nonhuman actors while retracing its development from its initial assemblage during the 19th century to its steady evolution into a smart structure from the mid-20th century onward. It takes a close look at US-American literary and filmic fictions and the ways in which they sought to make sense of this extraordinary structure throughout the 20th and early 21st centuries. More traditional poststructuralist spatial theories are connected with concepts and methods of Actor-Network Theory in a compelling account of the skyscraper's evolution as reflected in fictional media from early 20th-century short stories via a range of action, disaster and horror films to selected city novels of the 1990s and 2000s.
