

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910557753403321
Autore	Wright Teresa
Titolo	Handbook of protest and resistance in China / / edited by Teresa Wright
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Northampton, MA : , : Edward Elgar Pub., , 2019
ISBN	1-78643-378-8
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (468 pages)
Collana	Handbooks of Research on Contemporary China
Disciplina	303.484
Soggetti	Protest movements - China Social movements - China Electronic books.
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents: Introduction / Teresa Wright -- Part I: Overviews -- 1. Unrest and regime survival / Andrew Wedeman -- 2. Social unrest in China: a bird's eye view / Christian Goebel -- Part II: Protest, dissent, and the law -- 3. Governing political expression: legitimacy and legal culture / Pitman Potter -- 4. Legal advocacy as liberal resistance: the experience of China's human rights lawyers / Eva Pils -- 5. Mass disputes and China's legal system / Hualing Fu -- 6. Dissent below the radar: contention in the daily politics of grassroots organizations / Sophia Woodman -- Part III: Urban labor -- 7. Labor legislation, workers, and the Chinese state / Jenny Chan and Mark Selden -- 8. Worker protests and state response in present-day China: trends, characteristics, and new developments, 2011-2016 / Lu Zhang -- 9. China's contentious cab drivers / Manfred Elfstrom -- 10. Thinking like a state: doing labor activism in south China / Darcy Pan -- Part IV: Rural residents -- 11. Collective petitions and local state responses in rural China / Lei Guang and Yang Su -- 12. Land protests in rural China / Christopher Heurlin -- Part V: Urban homeowners -- 13. Homeowners' rights protection actions in China: why some succeed and others fail / Zhiming Sheng -- 14. Homeowners' activism in urban China: old goals, new strategies / Dragan Pavlicevic, Long Sun, and Zhengxu Wang -- Part VI: Environmental protest -- 15. Environmental public interest campaigns: a new phenomenon in China's contentious politics / H. Christoph

Steinhardt -- 16. Networked contention against waste incinerators in China: brokers, linkages and dynamics of diffusion / Bjoørn Alpermann and Maria Bondes -- 17. Possibilities for environmental governance in China? Anti-incinerator activists turned participants in municipal waste management in Guangzhou / Natalie W.M. Wong -- 18. Anti-nuclear protest in China / Simona Grano and Yuheng Zhang -- Part VII: Religion -- 19. Religious charity, repurposing, and "claim-staking" resistance: the case of gospel rehab / Susan McCarthy -- 20. Informality as resistance among Catholics and Protestants in China / Marie-Eve Reny -- 21. Protestant resistance and activism in China's official churches / Carsten Vala -- Part VIII : Information and communications technologies -- 22. From mobilization to legitimization: digital media and the evolving repertoire of contention in contemporary China / Jun Liu -- 23. Patriotism without state blessing: Chinese cyber nationalists in a predicament / Rongbin Han -- 24. Microblog dissent and censorship during the 2012 Bo Xilai scandal / Christopher Cairns -- Part IX: Hong Kong -- 25. Hong Kong's struggle to define its political future / Suzanne Pepper -- 26. Dissenting media: Post-1997 Hong Kong / Joyce Y.M. Nip -- Part X: Ethnic minorities -- 27. The environmental protest movement in inner Mongolia / Uchrahl Otede -- 28. Ethnic unrest and China's multiple problematic others / Tom Cliff -- 29. More creative, more international : shifts in Uyghur-related violence / Justin V. Hastings -- Index.

Sommario/riassunto

Chinese citizens are far from docile, and regularly and vociferously rise up in collective protest. In some cases they have successfully applied pressure, forcing political and economic elites to satisfy their demands. In others, they have been brutally suppressed. More often than not, however, the results have been mixed. This Handbook explores individual and collective acts of protest and resistance in China since 1989, examining their key unifying underlying themes and their effect on relations between the government and society. Featuring twenty-nine chapters of original research from top scholars, this Handbook spans the broad range of protest and resistance in contemporary China. Its coverage of popular contention related to labour, land, the environment, nationalism, home ownership, information and communication technologies, the law, religion, Hong Kong and ethnic minority groups illuminates the complexity and diversity of citizen actions. The Handbook of Protest and Resistance in China suggests that while these protests and acts of resistance might threaten the ruling Chinese Communist Party, in order to strengthen and legitimise the Party's rule governing authorities' best course of action may be to allow space for citizens to air their grievances, and to prioritise the resolution of complaints. This Handbook will be an invaluable resource for scholars and graduate students of Chinese and comparative politics, as well as for policy makers and interested readers seeking up to date data on protest and resistance in China, and to better understand the problems and perspectives of Chinese citizens.
