Sommario/riassunto	This book explores the economic, commercial, cultural, and social integration between the northern region of San Juan in Argentina and the IV Region of Coquimbo in Chile. It emphasizes the significance of the bioceanic corridor as a crucial channel for facilitating this integration. The work delves into historical precedents and current conditions of both regions, highlighting the challenges posed by the Andes mountain range. The author aims to showcase the collaborative efforts needed from both countries to overcome geographical barriers and enhance mutual development. The intended audience includes scholars and policymakers interested in regional integration and cross-border cooperation.
