

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910634061203321
Autore	Rohland Eleonora
Titolo	¿Historia entrelazada y el medio ambiente? : Transformaciones socioambientales en el Caribe, 1492-1800
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Bielefeld, : Kipu-Verlag, 2020
Descrizione fisica	1 electronic resource (90 p.)
Collana	Ensayos InterAmericanos
Soggetti	History Colonialism & imperialism The environment
Lingua di pubblicazione	Spagnolo
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Sommario/riassunto	The objective of entangled history and the environment is to introduce climatic and other environmental factors into the postcolonial debate on the unequal power relations between the metropolis and its colonies. Dealing with both environment and empire, as well as unequal (colonial) power relations, has so far largely occurred in separate fields, environmental history, and postcolonial studies. The book attempts to bring the two strands together and to combine the conceptual perspective of intertwined history and comparative practices in order to highlight both material and constructed (or discursive) aspects of the environment as a factor in the formation of unequal (colonial) power relations. Two case studies are conducted through this conceptual lens. The first offers a new perspective on Christopher Columbus' first contact with the Arawak in Hispaniola in 1492. The second examines how climate became an argument for enslaving Africans and displacing them to sugar plantations in the Caribbean.