Sommario/riassunto

Higher education in Europe and beyond faces a series of major challenges. The economic crisis has accelerated expectations of an increased role in addressing economic and societal challenges while, at the same time, putting pressure on available finances. Broader trends such as shifting student demographics and expectations, globalisation and mobility and new ways of working with business have contributed to these increased pressures. In the light of these trends there have been moves, both from national or regional agencies and from individual institutions to respond by combining resources, either through collaborative arrangements or more fundamentally through mergers between two or more universities. This volume seeks to draw upon recent and past experiences of mergers and associations short of a merger and to approach the subject both from a systemic level and from the perspective of individual institutions. Inevitably the two levels are interlinked but broadly speaking this distinction is used to separate Part 1, dealing with perspectives at the level of a nation and national system, although often illustrated by examples which extend the range of cases (for countries such as France, Sweden, Romania, Wales, China, South Africa), and Part 2, which takes us down to individual case-studies analysed in depth (in countries such as France, UK, Romania, Spain, Australia). These experiences of course also show responses to wider forces and initiatives but allow a more detailed insight into the specific rationales and the implementation issues involved in effecting a university merger. Within the sections the general flow is from large to medium to small European countries and then to non-European. The chapters of this volume tell stories and make contributions in their own right. An introductory chapter seeks to guide the reader by pointing out from the start some recurrent themes and tensions. In seeking to identify the phenomenon of university mergers, their causes and their consequences, a series of dichotomies are discussed: alliance vs merger; external vs internal motivation; education vs research; short-term vs long-term outcomes and assessment; and motivation and implementation.

Sommario/riassunto	Il y a près de quarante ans, dans le cadre de son doctorat de sociologie, Michel Peroni engageait une enquête dans son propre entourage familial auprès d'émigrés italiens originaires du même petit village et de ses environs. Placée sous les auspices de la microsociologie goffmanienne et de l'ethnométhodologie, à travers une analyse des modalités de mise en récit de leur expérience migratoire, ainsi qu'un suivi ethnographique de leurs retours estivaux au village d'origine, l'enquête interrogeait la subsistance de leur attachement «au pays»; une enquête qui semblait alors ne pouvoir gagner quelques lettres de noblesse académique qu'en occultant à quel point le jeune enquêteur était lui-même empêtré dans son objet... C'est lors de ces périodes de retour au village, là où sa grand-mère avait quant à elle décidé quelques années auparavant de revenir définitivement pour y finir ses jours, que Michel Peroni – dans les temps morts de son enquête et saisi par l'intensité si particulière de sa présence au lieu – avait entrepris de la photographier sous toutes les coutures, lui qui n'était en rien photographe. Diptyque est la rencontre improbable et tardive de deux textes participant de régimes d'écriture et plus encore de production parfaitement hétérogènes, qui reviennent chacun séparément et chacun dans son registre propre sur ce qui fut accompli alors.
