Sommario/riassunto	In 2008, data protection security issues have never been so prominent following the loss by HMRC of the personal data of 25 million people and the subsequent furore and consultation into legislation change in this field. This briefing seeks to summarise the application of the Act to the employment discipline. It concentrates on the areas, which are useful and practical to employers by examining the Information Commissioner's Office code of practice. It answers many of the mundane, day-to-day data protection issues that employers and those who are responsible for personal data need to know.
