Sommario/riassunto

Women and Inequality in a Changing World examines the persistent challenges women face in achieving equality in social, economic, and political spheres, despite advancements in education and social movements. The book highlights progress made by women and explores how this contributes to more peaceful and prosperous societies. Edited by Hoda Mahmoudi, Jane L. Parpart, and Kate Seaman, it brings together global scholars and practitioners to provide diverse perspectives and innovative solutions for increasing the role of women. Suitable for students and scholars of gender studies, women's studies, and political science, the book is part of the Gender in a Global World series, which addresses gendered aspects of globalization.
