Sommario/riassunto

This book delves into the intersection of Marxism and education, exploring how Marxist theories can critique and transform academic institutions. It examines the impact of capitalism and political economy on both formal and informal education, highlighting how these forces shape universities and their communities. The work is part of an international series that encourages dialogue between Marxist traditions and other frameworks, aiming to rethink educational practices and policies. It targets scholars, educators, and activists interested in the dynamics of higher education and its potential for societal change.
