Sommario/riassunto	People with Specific Learning Disorders (SLD) have a particular sensory sensitivity, for which the environment significantly affects the quality of life. We speak of 'spectrum' because there is a great variety of behaviours, which do not allow the definition of universal design criteria, but require a new dynamic and flexible approach, which allows to customize the project responses. therefore, starting from the study of the specific needs of users, environmental conditions and design approaches, to provide innovative tools to support the design of 'therapeutic' environments.
