

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910777684203321
Autore	Keith Jeanette
Titolo	Rich man's war, poor man's fight [[electronic resource]] : race, class, and power in the rural South during the first world war // Jeanette Keith
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Chapel Hill, : University of North Carolina Press, c2004
ISBN	979-88-908785-6-4 0-8078-7589-9
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (271 p.)
Disciplina	940.3/16
Soggetti	World War, 1914-1918 - Protest movements - Southern States World War, 1914-1918 - Draft resisters - Southern States Social classes - Southern States - History - 20th century Farmers - Southern States - Political activity - History - 20th century Dissenters - Southern States - History - 20th century Southern States Race relations Southern States Social conditions 1865-1945 Southern States Rural conditions
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. 241-250) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents; Preface; Introduction; 1. Southern Antimilitarists on the Eve of War; 2. Which War, Whose Fight?: White Southerners Debate the Declaration of War and the Draft, 1917; 3. Fathers, Farmers, and Christians; 4. Agrarian Protest Begins; 5. Race, Class, Gender, and Draft Dodging; 6. The Surveillance State Comes to Rural Shade: Propaganda and Domestic Espionage in the Southern Countryside; 7. Resistance; Epilogue: After the War; Notes; Bibliography; Index;
Sommario/riassunto	During World War I, thousands of rural southern men, black and white, refused to serve in the military. Jeanette Keith trace this resistance; including whites' political opposition to militarism, southern blacks' reluctance to serve a nation that refused to respect their rights, and anger at class bias in federal conscription policies.