

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910778990703321
Autore	Emerson Thomas E. <1945->
Titolo	Cahokia and the archaeology of power [[electronic resource] /] / Thomas E. Emerson
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Tuscaloosa, AL, : University of Alabama Press, c1997
ISBN	0-8173-8365-4 0-585-18412-7
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (337 p.)
Disciplina	977.3/89
Soggetti	Indians of North America - Illinois - American Bottom - Antiquities Mississippian culture - Illinois - American Bottom Social archaeology - Illinois - American Bottom Cahokia Mounds State Historic Park (Ill.) American Bottom (Ill.) Antiquities
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. [269]-306) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents; List of Figures; List of Tables; Acknowledgments; 1. Introduction; 2. The Conceptual Parameters; 3. The Cultural-Historical Contexts; 4. Mississippian Rural Settlement; 5. Cahokian Rural Nodes: The Archaeological Evidence; 6. Interpreting Cahokian Rural Settlements; 7. The Cahokian Symbolic World; 8. Cahokian Rural Cults; 9. Conclusions; References Cited; Index
Sommario/riassunto	This dramatic and controversial new interpretation of Cahokian leadership strategies examines the authority a ruling elite exercised over the surrounding countryside through a complex of social, political, and religious symbolism. This study uses the theoretical concepts of agency, power, and ideology to explore the development of cultural complexity within the hierarchically organized Cahokia Middle Mississippian society of the American Bottom from the 11th to the 13th centuries. By scrutinizing the available archaeological settlement and symbolic evidence, Em