

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910779091903321
Autore	Murphy Sheila C. <1974->
Titolo	How television invented new media [[electronic resource] /] / Sheila C. Murphy
Pubbl/distr/stampa	New Brunswick, N.J., : Rutgers University Press, c2011
ISBN	1-283-86445-2 0-8135-5094-7
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (203 p.)
Disciplina	384.55
Soggetti	Television broadcasting - Technological innovations Television - Technological innovations Interactive television Convergence (Telecommunication) Television interactive toys
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. 169-178) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Introduction : how television invents new media -- "This is intelligent television" : the emerging technologies of video games, computers, and the medium of television -- Is this convergence? : postnetwork television, new media and emerging middletexts -- From tube to a "series of tubes" : television in and as new media -- Alt-ctrl : the freedom of remotes and controls -- Conclusion : television is not new media.
Sommario/riassunto	Now if I just remembered where I put that original TV play device--the universal remote control . . . Television is a global industry, a medium of representation, an architectural component of space, and a nearly universal frame of reference for viewers. Yet it is also an abstraction and an often misunderstood science whose critical influence on the development, history, and diffusion of new media has been both minimized and overlooked. How Television Invented New Media adjusts the picture of television culturally while providing a corrective history of new media studies itself. Personal computers, video game systems, even iPods and the Internet built upon and borrowed from television to become viable forms. The earliest personal computers, disguised as video games using TV sets as monitors, provided a case study for television's key role in the emergence of digital interactive devices. Sheila C. Murphy analyzes how specific technologies emerge and how representations, from South Park to Dr. Horrible's Sing-Along-Blog, mine the history of television just as they converge with new methods of the making and circulation of images. Past and failed attempts to link television to computers and the Web also indicate how services like Hulu or Netflix On-Demand can give rise to a new era for entertainment and program viewing online. In these concrete ways, television's role in new and emerging media is solidified and finally recognized.
