

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910779648903321
Autore	Coyne Christopher J
Titolo	Doing bad by doing good [[electronic resource]] : why humanitarian action fails // Christopher J. Coyne
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Stanford, CA, : Stanford Economics and Finance, an imprint of Stanford University Press, 2013
ISBN	0-8047-8611-9
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (273 p.)
Disciplina	361.2
Soggetti	Humanitarian assistance - Economic aspects Humanitarian intervention - Economic aspects Economic assistance
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. 223-245) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Frontmatter -- Acknowledgments -- Contents -- Preface -- Introduction. A Living Example of the Puzzle -- chapter 1. The Man of the Humanitarian System -- chapter 2. The Evolution of Humanitarian Action -- chapter 3. Adaptability and the Planner's Problem -- chapter 4. Political Competition Replaces Market Competition -- chapter 5. The Bureaucracy of Humanitarianism -- chapter 6. Killing People with Kindness -- chapter 7. Solving the Puzzle -- chapter 8. Rethinking the Man of the Humanitarian System -- Notes -- References -- Index
Sommario/riassunto	In 2010, Haiti was ravaged by a brutal earthquake that affected the lives of millions. The call to assist those in need was heard around the globe. Yet two years later humanitarian efforts led by governments and NGOs have largely failed. Resources are not reaching the needy due to bureaucratic red tape, and many assets have been squandered. How can efforts intended to help the suffering fail so badly? In this timely and provocative book, Christopher J. Coyne uses the economic way of thinking to explain why this and other humanitarian efforts that intend to do good end up doing nothing or causing harm. In addition to Haiti, Coyne considers a wide range of interventions. He explains why the U. S. government was ineffective following Hurricane Katrina, why the international humanitarian push to remove Muammar Gaddafi in Libya may very well end up causing more problems than prosperity, and why decades of efforts to respond to crises and foster development around the world have resulted in repeated failures. In place of the dominant approach to state-led humanitarian action, this book offers a bold alternative, focused on establishing an environment of economic freedom. If we are willing to experiment with aid—asking questions about how to foster development as a process of societal discovery, or how else we might engage the private sector, for instance—we increase the range of alternatives to help people and empower them to improve their communities. Anyone concerned with and dedicated to alleviating human suffering in the short term or for the long haul, from policymakers and activists to scholars, will find this book to be an insightful and provocative reframing of humanitarian action.
