| Sommario/riassunto      | R. Bruce Elder argues that the authors of many of the manifestoes thatannounced in such lively ways the appearance of yet another artisticmovement shared a common aspiration: they proposed to reformulatethe visual, literary, and performing arts so that they might take onattributes of the cinema. The cinema, Elder argues, became, in the earlydecades of the twentieth century, a pivotal artistic force around which aremarkable variety and number of aesthetic forms took shape. Todemonstrate this, Elder begins with a wide-ranging discussion thatopens up some broad topics concern |
