

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910781452103321
Autore	D'Amico Linda
Titolo	Otavalan women, ethnicity, and globalization [[electronic resource] /] / Linda D'Amico
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Albuquerque, : University of New Mexico Press, 2011
ISBN	1-283-63684-0 0-8263-4993-5
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (252 p.)
Disciplina	986.6/13
Soggetti	Otavalo Indians - History Otavalo Indians - Ethnic relations Otavalo Indians - Social conditions Indian women - Ecuador - Otavalo Region - Social conditions Culture and globalization - Ecuador - Otavalo Region
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Front Cover; Title Page; Copyright; Contents; Acknowledgments; Introduction; Part One; 1: Rosa Lema, Elsie Clews Parsons, and Me in Peguiche: Gendered Ethnicity, Interculturalism, and Feminist Methodologies; 2: Gendered Globalization in Peguiche, 1940 and 1941: Rosa Lema and Elsie Clews Parsons; 3: Rosa Lema in New York City, November 1949: Indigenismo Reimagined; Part Two; 4: The Cultural Construction of Place: Otavaleñas Integrating Mountains, History, Folktales, Cosmology, and Well-Being Through Practice 5: Otavaleño Foodways: Cultivating Social and Spiritual Networks Through Cuisine, Agriculture, and Ritual6: Designing Transcultural Identities in Local and Global Marketplaces: Peguiche, Otavalo, and Beyond; Epilogue: August 12, 2002; Postscript, March 2010; Notes; References Cited; Index; Back Cover
Sommario/riassunto	Gender is at the center of D'Amico's analysis as she looks beyond the overlapping lives of Elsie Clews Parsons and Rosa Lema, both innovators and adept at crossing cultural boundaries, to explore the interrelationship between gender, ethnicity, an

