Sommario/riassunto

Le XXXIXe congrès de la Société des historiens médiévistes de l'Enseignement supérieur public s'est tenu, en avril-mai 2008, dans une capitale orientale, Le Caire, pour faire dialoguer ensemble orientalistes et « occidentalistes » et rappeler que la richesse culturelle de l'Orient et de l'Occident au Moyen Âge vient non seulement des héritages communs, mais aussi du dialogue et des échanges qui n'ont cessé durant le millénaire médiéval. Ce volume, intitulé L'autorité de l'écrit au Moyen Age, traite tout à la fois de la production de l'écrit, de l'autorité du document et de la constitution d'archives dans l'Occident médiéval comme dans les mondes byzantin et musulman. Il envisage en premier lieu la place de l'écrit dans les sociétés où la parole et le geste sont essentiels, considérant les groupes qui ont pour métier d'écrire (rédacteurs, clercs de chancellerie, cadis...), étudiant leurs pratiques et la diffusion des techniques d'écritures mises en œuvre. L'usage de l'écrit conduit à la question de l'autorité du document produit et de son efficacité : l'écrit et les gestes enregistrés, les signes de validation, la qualité des personnes qui le présentent et celle des témoins qui le souscrivent, les choix linguistiques multiples adoptés par les rédacteurs, les situations dans lesquelles le document a été utilisé, même pour le falsifier. Dans le monde musulman par exemple, où la fiabilité de témoins intègres est supérieure à celle d'un document écrit, potentiellement falsifiable, on comprend que le statut du document écrit, son aptitude à faire preuve, soit moindre qu'en Occident où c'est une de ses premières fonctions. La constitution et la conservation d'archives sont au cœur des enjeux de pouvoir : à qui est confiée la garde des documents et dans quels lieux ? Ici aussi Occident et Orient se distinguent par leurs pratiques : les rois de France pensaient que la constitution des registres d'actes royaux manifestait leur pouvoir alors que les souverains musulmans ne...

Mindanao Chabacano owes many of its features (including over 10% of its basic and more of its non-basic lexicon) to the influence of Philippine languages, and some of its typological features, such as the basic VSO constituent order, typify Philippine languages but atypical of Ibero-Asian creoles as a whole. Its sizeable component of basic Philippine-derived vocabulary and its incorporation of structural features which cannot be traced back simply to Spanish, allow us to classify it as a mixed creole. In this paper I examine the extent to which various structural features of Mindanao Creole Sp

Sommario/riassunto	Cholera remains a global threat in the 21st century, chiefly due to the continued lack of adequate resource provision and the political will to ensure a safe potable water supply and sanitary waste disposal for a burgeoning global population. The current Special Issue on cholera provides an overview of the available control measures from the perspectives of bioecology, immunology and vaccinology and treatment. These modalities have the potential to reduce cholera case fatality rates to less than 1% if properly implemented. In this Special Issue on cholera, the current state of the art in science-based control measures is reported on by several of the world's leaders in research on the control of cholera and allied acute watery diarrheal diseases. Dr. Rita Colwell, Dr. Anwar Huq and colleagues at the University of Maryland and the University of Florida will review the latest information on environmental factors related to the prediction and prevention of cholera. Dr. Jacqueline Dean and Dr. John Clemens contribute an overview of recent insights into the performance of licensed and recommended cholera vaccines. Dr. Jan Holmgren will present an update on cholera immunity and the next generation of cholera vaccines. Dr. David Nalin will discuss cholera treatment options and optimums for the 21st century, and Dr. Richard A. Cash will focus on bringing diarrhea treatment, control, and prevention to the community.
