Nota di contenuto Religion, media, history -- The past in the present?: a tale of bouquets and bombsites -- Reframing the problem: mediating the recent history of 'the Balinese' -- The subject of tolerance: televising 'the teachings of our religion' -- Assume the position: performative style and the voice of authority -- Substantial transmissions: religion and the idea of 'the old Javanese text' -- Plus Ca change: from textual fetish to performative accomplishment -- A dramatic performance: mpu kuturan and the three sanctuaries -- The complexity of the realm: chasing a traditional tale. Scholars of religion have always worked closely with media of one kind Sommario/riassunto or another, from sacred books and archaic languages to cassettesermons and the Internet. Yet comparatively little attention has been paid to the ways we actually use these and other media in the pursuit of historical inquiry. Drawing on ethnographic and archival research conducted on the Indonesian island of Bali, this book offers a critique of the media-related assumptions underpinning fields as diverse in their subject matter and approach as the history of religions, British > cultural studies and Old Javanese philology. Its central contention is that more nuanced attention to problems of media will have serious implications for how we think about the study of religions, past and
