

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910791666403321
Autore	Guy-Bray Stephen
Titolo	Against reproduction : where Renaissance texts come from / / Stephen Guy-Bray
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Toronto, [Canada] ; ; Buffalo, [New York] : , : University of Toronto Press, , 2009 ©2009
ISBN	1-4426-8581-6
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (238 p.)
Disciplina	822.309
Soggetti	English drama - Early modern and Elizabethan, 1500-1600 - History and criticism English drama - 17th century - History and criticism
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Introduction: the works of art in the age of human reproduction -- Marriages -- Seductions -- Beginnings.
Sommario/riassunto	The idea of the author as parent and the text as child is a pervasive metaphor throughout Renaissance poetry and drama. In Against Reproduction , Stephen Guy-Bray sets out to systematically interrogate this common trope, and to consider the limits of using heterosexual reproduction to think of textual creation. Through an analysis of Renaissance texts by poets and playwrights including William Shakespeare, Christopher Marlowe, and John Milton, Guy-Bray argues that the reproductive metaphor was only one of the ways in which writers presented their own literary production. Their uses of sexual language reveal that these authors were surprisingly ambivalent about their own writing. Guy-Bray suggests that they often presented their work in such a way as to feminize themselves and to associate the writing process with shame and abjection. Offering fresh perspectives on well-known texts, Against Reproduction is an accessible and compelling book that will affect the study of both Renaissance literature and queer theory.