

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910793920803321
Titolo	War and stereotypes : the image of Japan's military abroad // Olavi K. Falt, Joseph Fonseca, Henna-Riikka Pennanen, Adam Rock, Aiko Otsuka, Frank Jacob, Hiram Kumper, Jeffrey M Shaw, Sarah K. Danielsson, Sabine Muller, Frank Jacob, Sepp Linhart, Jurgen Angelow, Christian Gerlach, Martin Clauss, Verena Moritz, Stefan Rinke, Stefanie Schuler-Springorum, Roman Toppel, Jorit Wintjes
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Paderborn, : Brill   Schoningh, 2020
ISBN	3-657-70293-8
Edizione	[1st ed.]
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (230 pages)
Collana	War (Hi) Stories ; 7
Disciplina	355.0095209034
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Sommario/riassunto	Japan has always been fascinating for foreign observers. This volume will show, how its military has been perceived abroad and what image about the Japanese Army existed between 1853 and 1945 in the minds of those who read and heard stories from the Far East. When forcefully opened by a US mission in 1853, Japan was transformed by its ruling elites into a strong nation state, whose military and political forces wanted to avoid a colonization by foreign powers. Therefore, Japan's military capacities were of special interest and the army and navy were westernized very fast. Japanese soldiers became known as "Asia's Prussians", and were often described as "gallant enemies". This image, however, should rapidly change after the First World War. During the battles in China since 1937, and the Pacific since 1941, the Japanese soldiers were often referred to as "devils." This volume will take a closer look at the images of Japan's military abroad to show how these images were created, how they changed and what stimulated the differences with regard to the foreign perception of Japan and its military between 1853 and 1945.